How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

The Westwood Real Estate Income Fund outperformed its benchmark (the ICE BofA Fixed Rate Preferred Securities Index) by several hundred basis points during the period.

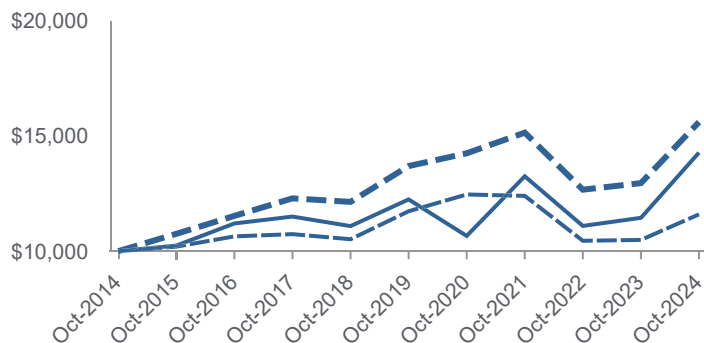

The Fund's common equity portfolio returned 31.8%, contributing 8.6% to the total portfolio return. After REITs were stuck in neutral for much of 2023, the Federal Reserve's decision to cut interest rates was a tailwind for investors as REITs tend to benefit from falling rates due to decreased borrowing costs and potential earnings expansion. The Fund's allocation to the Data Centers and Residential REIT sub-sectors were the main contributors to performance for the period.

The Fund's preferred equity portfolio returned 25.7%, contributing 17.7% to the total portfolio return. Allocation and selection within the Fund's preferred equity sleeve were the main contributors to performance with Health Care and Lodging leading the way from a sub-sector perspective.

While we remain cautiously optimistic with regard to the rate outlook, our conviction on real estate fundamentals has notably strengthened. We have intentionally tilted our portfolio toward property sectors that we believe should continue to heal in this setting (office and lodging in particular) as well as thrive (grocery-anchored centers and net lease).
